Capping of GTP-hydrolyzing proteins in frog liver microsomes. Liver microsomes from Rana pipiens, Rana catesbeiana, and Xenopus laevis have been isolated and characterized. All of the microsomal fractions have similar activities of drug metabolism, thymidine kinase, and carbonic anhydrase. Membrane-associated GTP-hydrolyzing activity, however, was not detected in fractions prepared from these livers. However, using a cell-free system containing either pure liver microsomes or microsomes prepared from whole-liver homogenates, a GTPase activity was detected in all fractions. After purification of the GTPase by ion-exchange chromatography, the enzyme was indistinguishable in chromatographic behavior, amino acid composition, and heat stability from the GTPase activity detected in liver microsomes. The inhibitor profiles of both membrane-associated GTPase activities were identical. These results suggest that liver microsomes contain a GTPase not associated with a typical microsomal membrane and a GTPase found in association with a microsomal membrane. Lansing — An effort to amend Michigan's constitution to require affirmative consent for sex before marriage and for a person to be considered to have given consent if they are incapacitated — commonly called the "Yes Means Yes" initiative — is advancing in a process that will take it to voters in November 2018. The Supreme Court ruled earlier this month that the proposal, which won approval in August by the Senate and House and was signed by Democratic Gov. Gretchen Whitmer in October, is now in a proper place for voters to consider. The ruling by the state Court of Appeals for the Fourth Appellate District on Jan. 5 was the latest development in a protracted legal battle over the proposal by Equality Michigan, the liberal group that was the leading advocate for the initiative. The proposal calls for "affirmative, conscious and voluntary agreement to engage in sexual activity" as a necessary condition for entering a marriage and for a person to be considered to have given consent if they are incapacitated. Equality Michigan, the Detroit Regional Chamber and other groups that are supporting the proposal contend that making a "yes" or "no" answer to the question of whether sexual activity has taken place or is taking place is not sufficient to prevent what the groups say is a 82157476af
